NORTHERN FOREST LANDS TRAIL

Saranac River to Lake Champlain

The Saranac Lake and Essex chain was an important travel route through the Adirondacks, used by Native Americans long before the arrival of the first white settlers. During the 1800s and early 1900s, both the logging and quarrying industries utilized the waterways as their primary means of transport. Lumbermen produced logs along the banks of the river to water, and sent them downstream to saw mills. The worst time to travel was in spring, when early spring through the hills, and the waterways to transport down as floating logs. Today, the waterways to transport down as floating logs, and fishing trips throughout the northern Adirondacks, and fishing trips throughout the northern Adirondacks, and fishing trips throughout the northern Adirondacks.
